

New online support for coach-mentors

Training Journal - October, 2006

Coach-mentoring experts at the Oxford Total Learning Group are launching a new service, using web-based technology to deliver coach-mentoring excellence in various audio-visual formats.

Recognising the international business environment's increasing need for convenient, flexible and easy-to-access information around the clock, the Oxford Coach-Mentoring Channel – www.ocmc.net - brings together a catalogue of coach-mentoring learning material.

Highlights include the Oxford School of coaching & Mentoring annual conference, which will feature audio recordings of the conference report; workshop sessions focusing on the latest developments; and insights on coach-mentoring presented by renowned experts from around the world.

In addition, a series of video master classes gives browsers the opportunity to watch the theory being put into practice, with various techniques being applied to eth realities of specific cases and circumstances.

The Expert Insights section on the OCMC website provides a collection of learning materials and audios discussions from leading members of the coach-mentoring profession. Launching early this month, the sessions are accessible from the members' area of the site.
